Introduction

1. Freedom and resistance

1.1 Existentialism: doomed to be free

1.2 Fascism and the banality of evil

1.3 A critique of instrumental reason

1.3.1 Dialectics

1.3.2 Enlightenment and technology

1.4 Individualisation or ego-emancipation

1.4.1 Critical subject and subversive bodies

1.4.2 Discourse and resistance

1.4.3 'Man' as discourse

2. Discourse and doom

2.1 A first indication of a discursive transition: caught up in paradoxes

2.1.1 Political paradoxes

2.1.2 Existential frictions

2.1.3 Macropolitics: fragmentation and polarisation

2.2 Discourse of doom: from a religious soteriology to a dialectical utopism

2.3 Dying or dying out?

2.3.1 Future scenarios, or scenarios without a future?

2.3.2 Statistics: the knowledge of the state

2.4 Anthropocene or Capitalocene?

3. From the pyramid to networks

3.1 Imagination: thinking and speaking in images

3.2 Pyramidal orientation: linear-exclusive

3.2.1 Hierarchical architecture: top-down

3.2.2 Hierarchy: to be or to see?

3.3 Network orientation: circular-inclusive

3.3.1 Cybernetics: the cyborg as homo informans

3.3.2 Individual: node in networks

3.4 Philisophical extrapolations

3.4.1 Deleuze: from the tree to rhizomes

3.4.2 Foucault: supplementary, dispositional resistance

4. Integral resistance

4.1 Being interested: scaled political reflaction

4.1.1 Politics: acting within power relations

4.1.2 Scaled political action: dividual, ego, individual, subject, nation state, UN

4.2 Macropolitical opposition: revolt and rebellion
4.2.1 Spectrum of resistance: from extremist to participatory resistance
4.2.2 Connective, transversal and collective resistance: from interface back to face-to-face
4.3 Mesopolitical resistance: circular valorisation
4.4 Micropolitical subversion: to differ from one's self 4.4.1 It starts with you, yet the personal is political!
4.4.2 From a dividual, via the individual, to interviduals

5. The Anthropocene condition
5.1 Fundamentalism and radicalisation
5.2 Quintessence: self-consciousness and technology
5.3 Radical mediocrity: ruled by media
5.3.1 Farmakon: technology as a blessing and a curse
5.3.2 The medium is the message
5.4 Ecopolitical interesse: scaled in-betweenness
5.4.1 Integral literacy: alphabetisation, media literacy, eco-literacy 5.4.2 Integral health beyond repair: positive, sustainable, integral 5.4.3 ECO3-sustainability: physical, social, mental 5.5 Reflaction: interesse as revolutionary circularity

6. An ecosophical point of view
6.1 Freedom and resistance revisited: to oppose and supplement
6.1.1 Interesse as discretionary space
6.1.2 Subjectivity: from subjection to design
6.2 Transitional designs: Dasein is design
6.3 Ecosophical manoeuvres
6.3.1 Art of existence: physical, social and mental ecology
6.3.2 Eco-emancipation, medial enlightenment, physical spirituality

Bibliography
Index